The OC Health Care Agency (HCA) today reported the first case of locally acquired COVID-19, more commonly known as novel coronavirus.

The individual, a woman in her 50s, appears to have acquired infection locally and is currently hospitalized in isolation and reported in stable condition. The HCA's Public Health Services staff are following-up with people who may have been exposed and an investigation is underway to determine how the individual contracted the virus.

Details about three additional cases confirmed today include:

- A man in his 70s who is isolated at home, travel-related exposure
- A man in his 30s who is isolated at home, contact to a known case
- A man in his 60s who is hospitalized in isolation, travel-related exposure

"As public and private labs increase testing capability and surveillance, we expect to see more cases of COVID-19," said Dr. Nichole Quick, County Health Officer. "We realize the mitigation strategies that have rolled out this week by schools, businesses, and all levels of government are concerning for community members. We empathize and want to thank OC residents for their flexibility and willingness to make adjustments to their daily lives to help protect and promote the health and wellbeing of their neighbors."
